India, Papa hold their breath for graduation

With watering eyes, runny noses and uncontrollable coughs, the recruits of India Company, 3rd Recruit Training Battalion, and Papa Company, 4th Recruit Training Battalion, applied their training inside Parris Island's infamous gas chamber June 26. Inside the chamber, recruits were exposed to an irritant gas. However, recruits were required to endure its harsh effects to ensure they knew how to use protective masks and keep themselves safe should they ever face a toxic gas threat. Some recruits panic and some tend to take their masks off or attempt to run out of the chamber, said Sgt. Christopher Proffitt, a chemical defense specialist on Parris Island. However, doing that results in recruits going inside the chamber again.

The tear gas used for training recruits is actually made up of microscopic crystals that irritate exposed skin and mucus membranes, said Proffitt. Recruits entered the dimly lit building in groups and lined up against the walls as the instructor prepared the gas. "As soon as I walked in, my neck started burning," said Pvt. Joshua

After only one year of competitive shooting, a Marine with the Parris Island Marksmanship Training Unit, shot his way to becoming one of the nation's best pistol shooters. Cpl. Carl M. Clegg, 26, received the Distinguished Pistol Shot Badge on Aug. 9. The badge is one of the highest honors a pistol shooter can achieve, said Staff Sgt. Patrick Codding, Marine in charge of the marksmanship trainer schools on Parris Island. Clegg is one of very few Marines to receive the award, which typically takes a career of competitive shooting to earn. "He's just a natural," Codding said. "When he gets a weapon in his hands, he knows what to do with it."

India, Papa Companies attack Hue City

Recruits of India Company, 3rd Recruit Training Battalion, and Papa Company, 4th Recruit Training Battalion, the Crucible event known as the Battle of Hue City on Parris Island's Page Field on Aug. 9-10.

The event gives recruits a chance to use teamwork, call commands and take leadership to cross obstacles and large open areas using squad tactics, said Sgt. Jonathan Rado, 24, an event coordinator.

The event is dedicated to the Battle of Hue City, which was fought in 1968 during the Vietnam War. The battle is remembered as one of the bloodiest battles of the Tet Offensive. It was the largest urban battle the Marine Corps had fought up until the 2004 Battle of Fallujah in Iraq.

Recruits are grouped into 13-person teams. During the Crucible, the drill instructors will act as mentors and teachers to better advise the recruits during the 56-hour ordeal.

The course stretches approximately half a mile. During the course, recruits practice patrolling tactics and crossing danger zones.

The assault portion of the course is approximately 400 yards of sand, razor wire, walls and ditches.

Recruits navigated by crawling with their faces toward the dirt to create a smaller target.

"The crawl was the hardest part," said Pfc. Jordan Kountz, 19, native of Tucson, Ariz, and from Platoon 4022, Papa Company, 4th Recruit Training Battalion. "It used up a lot of energy and patience."

They are continuously bombarded with the sounds of machine gun and mortar fire created by an air pressure gun and audio recording.

"It was difficult to hear my buddy over the noise, but I was still able to yell commands," said Kountz.

Every recruit has a chance to go through the course during the Crucible, said Rado, a Baltimore native.

Recruits rush the last few yards of the event and set up a perimeter in the tree line. From there, they are given time to clean their rifles, take care of their themselves and eat food.

The Battle of Hue City is just one of several challenges the recruits of India and Papa Companies faced during the Crucible. It tested their ability to move, communicate and advance toward an enemy. These skills will continuously be tested as they continue their training in the Marine Corps.

Papa Company sprints to the finish

Recruits of Papa Company, 4th Recruit Training Battalion, stormed the sands of the day movement course on Parris Island's Page Field on July 24.

"The tactics they learn here are the basics of how to shoot, move and communicate on the battlefield," said Sgt. Jason Boggess, 26, lead day movement instructor.

Recruits are taught how to navigate a simulated battle environment using rushes, clear obstacles, check for traps and stay in communication with their partner or fire team.

Recruits must stay in contact and advance through the course with the fellow recruit. If they fail to do so, they will be sent back to the beginning.

"You have to keep eye contact and speak loudly," said Pfc. Kimberly Lindberg, 26, of Platoon 4022.

After rushing through the tree line, recruits climbed over a wall only to have their vision hindered by a smoke screen.

Recruits watched their steps as they made their way through a grid of razor wire less than a foot above ground masked by white smoke.

"The smoke is used to conceal the tangle wire and forces recruits to pay attention," said Boggess, a native of Stuart, Fla.

Recruits crawled with their faces toward the sand to the biggest obstacle on the course.

The obstacle consists of razor wire. To get through the obstacle, recruits must use their rifle to push the wire away from them as they crawl under it. Their buddy can also help by using their rifle to help raise more of the wire to pass through.

"It's used as a choke point," said Boggess. "It forces recruits to slow down."

After clearing the obstacle, recruits rushed and low crawled to the finish.

"It was fun and put into context everything we have learned," said Lindberg. "It was everything I pictured boot camp to be."

The knowledge the recruits have gained through the course will carry them through their future training in the Marine Corps as they continue to sharpen their skills to work as a single unit on the battlefield.

PARRIS ISLAND SHOOTING TEAM WINS BIG

Marines from the Parris Island Shooting Team have finished yet another successful competition season, and presented their awards to Parris Island's commanding general Aug. 9.

The team brought home individual and team trophies for both rifle and pistol while representing Parris Island and the Marine Corps. Throughout the season, they pitted their skills against all branches of service and civilian shooters.

While training did not begin for the team until January, the Depot Intramural Rifle and Pistol Competition, used to choose new competitors for the team, took place in November 2011.

The team is made up of new Marines and Marines from last year's team. Strangely enough, new team members, such as Cpl. Carl Clegg, are chosen not for their ability to shoot, but for their character, said Staff Sgt. Patrick Coddling, supervisor of the marksmanship trainer schools at Parris Island.

"We don't care exactly how well you shoot," said Coddling, a 30-year-old from Copan, Okla. "It's your attitude, your 'trainability.' We choose them for their willingness to learn and want to be there."

Members of the team included Sgt. Justin Isham, team captain, and Lance Cpl. Van Thawng, team coach. The firing members were Clegg, Coddling, Sgt. Devin Cordray, and Gunnery Sgt. David Watts.

During the team's weeks of training, they focused on the needs of the team, rather than a set schedule. The shooters helped one another by sharing experience and advice.

The team is only allowed to compete in four competitions per fiscal year. They began in the Eastern Division Matches, held at Camp Lejeune, N.C., and won the Elliot Trophy, the oldest award in the Marine Corps competition. The Elliot Trophy is awarded to the rifle team with the highest aggregate score. Parris Island's team has won this trophy for the past two years.

While at the Eastern Division Matches, the team also won the Edson Trophy, which is awarded to the pistol team with the highest collective score. Parris Island's team has won this award three years in a row.

During the Interservice Rifle Championships at Marine Corps Base Quantico, Va., teams of all services compete at a national level for the top honor of winning the Marine Corps Combat Development Command Trophy. The Parris Island team won the award too.

Throughout the season, the team won 27 individual awards, including two members recognized as new high shooters for their events.

"There is not one member on this team that would have been successful without the other members of the team," said Coddling. "We don't look at it as an individual sport. When we left here, we left here as 14 team members."

After the season is over, the Marines return to their jobs. For those that are able to stay on the range, it's a chance for them to share everything they have learned over the past six months.

The ultimate goal is training recruits, said Coddling. The Marines are out there learning. It gives them the ability to come back to the Parris Island range with that knowledge and be a better primary marksmanship instructor or marksmanship coach, and they are more capable of training the recruits on marksmanship.

Clegg, a rookie competitive shooter, has competed on both the Parris Island and Marine Corps shooting teams and after only one year of competitive shooting, Clegg shot his way to becoming one of the nation's best pistol shooter. e. Clegg, who is from Whitmire, S.C., began teaching himself to shoot pistols about one year ago after being introduced to them by a fellow Marine. Having already had previous experience with other weapons as an infantry rifleman, Clegg caught on quickly to pistol shooting, and said the fundamentals were very similar to that of a rifle.

He shot in a local shooting competition, which included units from Parris Island and the Marine Corps Air Station in Beaufort, S.C. His shooting prowess impressed the members of the Parris Island shooting team and he was selected to join in January.

From there, Clegg and the team competed in more tournaments where he placed first in the gold tier at the Eastern Division matches and first in the silver tier at the Marine Corps Championships.

The Marine Corps shooting team spotted Clegg and his remarkable skills during the championships and gave him a temporary spot on the service wide team the next day.

He has the potential to be considered for permanent membership, said Gunnery Sgt. Timothy Lindeman, officer in charge of the Marine Corps pistol team.

After winning second in the gold tier at an inter service shooting championship, Clegg went with the team to compete in national matches in Ohio on July 15 where he competed against civilians and other service members.

"Being a new shooter, I didn't know what to expect," Clegg admitted. "I did expect to win."

Clegg fired several pistols at the match, including a 22 mm, 1911 .45 Automatic Colt Pistol, and a Beretta 9 mm. He fired a total of 30 rounds at the competition — 10 at a distance of 50 yards, and 20 at 25 yards. All the rounds were fired in a one-handed standing position, an unorthodox shooting stance in the Marine Corps.

Clegg placed first in the gold tier at the match and ninth among the top 100 pistol shooters in the country.

He is an asset to the Parris Island shooting team, to the Marine Corps shooting team, and Marine Corps marksmanship in general, Coddling said.

Brig. Gen. L. E. Reynolds, commanding general of Marine Corps Recruit Depot Parris Island, presented Clegg his Distinguished Pistol Shot Badge for excellent marksmanship performance at the indoor simulated marksmanship trainer on Parris Island on Aug. 9.

Clegg said he feels privileged to be part of the teams and hopes to achieve more in competitive shooting.

Coddling said he plans to make Clegg a primary marksmanship instructor on Parris Island, as Clegg has also qualified as a rifle expert for five consecutive years in the Marine Corps. Clegg will be able to impart his marksmanship knowledge to future U.S. Marines.

Brazile, 18, with Platoon 3057 and a native of Fulton, Mo. "I started to get nervous."

Recruits were instructed to close their eyes and hold their breath before loosening the airtight seal on their mask with their fingers. This protects the recruits' eyes and lungs from the burning effects of the gas.

Breaking the seal caused coughing and unsteady breathing, said Pfc. Jonathan Bauer, 20, of Platoon 3057 and a native of Virginia Beach, Va. Trying to regain a normal breathing pattern was difficult for him.

The instructor opened the chamber door only after all the recruits cleared their masks of the gas.

"I kind of want to do it again," said 18-year-old Pvt. Kahana Glenn, of Platoon 3057 and a native of Virginia Beach, Va. "Even though it sucked, it was a unique experience."

The pain was only temporary, said Pfc. Dillon Cox, 20, of Platoon 3057, from Lexington, S.C. Overall, the knowledge and skill gained for the experience was worth it.

The recruits of India and Papa Company, who graduate today, stepped out of the gas chamber not only with clearer sinuses and more Marine Corps knowledge, but also one step closer to becoming U.S. Marines.
