"I have not yet begun to fight!" USS BONHOMME RICHARD LHD 6

17 January 2012

Photo of the Day...

Machinist Mate 3rd Class Dianna Johnson tests lube oil samples from equipment in the main space machinery room for sediment and water aboard USS Bonhomme Richard (LHD 6). Normally, oil testing is done at midnight when changing between alternate systems. Lube oil testing is the first line of defense in preventing equipment failure. If a bad oil sample is found the Engineering Officer of the Watch is immediately notified and the watchstander will replace the oil in the specific equipment. A good oil sample is an assurance that the equipment is running properly.
