JBAB comes together in support of Toys for Tots

By Paul Bello

Joint Base Anacostia-Bolling
Public Affairs

It's going to be a holly jolly Christmas for youths around the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area as service members, civilians, and contractors from Joint Base Anacostia-Bolling have stepped up with some holiday cheer for those less fortunate.

Members of JBAB, along with several area businesses, are providing nearly 1,300 bicycles and countless toys, stuffed animals and board games as part of this year's Toys for Tots campaign.

Marines at JBAB's Naval and Marine Corps Reserve Center have been spearheading this year's coordination efforts and the response has been impressive. A portion of the drill deck at the center has been replaced by a sea of children's bicycles. Boxes filled to the brim with toys collected from tenant organizations and from drop boxes from the surrounding community are also present, as are the volunteers donating their time and generosity.

Navy Capt. Anthony T. Calandra, JBAB commander, stopped by earlier in the week to try his hand at assembling some boys and girls bikes. As a biking enthusiast, he said it doesn't take much to draw his interest when it comes to bikes.

"When an opportunity came up to volunteer assembling bikes, I couldn't resist. I'm averaging 9-10 bikes an hour," Calandra said. "Toys for Tots is a fantastic program and it does a lot to help local communities. That's something we can all take pride in and I'm proud how JBAB has responded."

Tech. Sgt. Mark Dorosheff, a member of the U.S. Air Force Band, also came by the Reserve Center Wednesday to help out wherever he could. Despite it being a very busy season for him and his fellow musicians, Dorosheff wasn't about to let his schedule stop him from volunteering.

"We just performed a concert at Washington, D.C.'s Constitution Hall and have others on the horizon, but when I heard they needed volunteers to come down here and assemble bikes, I was more than happy to do it. I feel inclined to help out around the holidays," Dorosheff said. "This is my first time volunteering for something like this and I hope to brighten up the holidays for as many kids as I can. That's what it's all about."

Joining Dorosheff that day were Pfc. Reginald Fletcher and Lance Cpl. Andrea Fitzgerald, both Marines at the Reserve Center. It was their first time volunteering and they agree on what Toys for Tots means to a community, in addition to the value it has to those volunteering.

"One of the perks to my job is helping others. That's what Toys for Tots does for people," Fitzgerald said. "It feels good knowing I can make someone happy this time of year. You can't beat that."

Anyone wishing to volunteer assembling bikes can still do so by stopping by the Naval and Marine Corps Reserve Center between now and Dec. 16, according to the Toys for Tots supply coordinator, Marine Sgt. Nathan Pirman. He said gifts collected this year will be later distributed by Maryland's Prince George County and by the Washington, D.C. Police.

Calandra also encourages any individual or group on post to volunteer at distributing bikes and toys to the distribution site at D.C. General Hospital, located at 1900 Massachusetts Avenue, SE in Washington, D.C. For more information, e-mail susan.moreno@navy.mil.

JBAB submitted for Installation Excellence Award by NDW commander

By Senior Airman

Joint Base Anacostia-Bolling
Public Affairs

Joint Base Anacostia-Bolling was nominated by Naval District Washington for the region's submission for the Commander in Chief's Annual Award for Installation Excellence.

NDW installations including Naval Support Activities Washington, Annapolis, South Potomac and Patuxent River, were judged on port and air operations; public safety, emergency management; security, force protection, facility improvements and support; energy and environment stewardship; community relations; and Fleet and Family Readiness.

"This award is a testament to the team concept here at JBAB," said Navy Capt. Anthony T. Calandra, JBAB commander. "In moving forward, we want to continue to support our strategic goals and continue to be stewards of DoD property."

A few achievements noted in the nomination package include: renovations of the Navy Lodge, shoppette, Burger King, Potomac Lanes and the JBAB Base Exchange; the swift response to the 5.8-magnitude earthquake and Hurricane Irene in August; the planning and execution in support of the first lady of the United States' participation in the installation's Congressional Spouses' Youth Service Project and Toys for Tots events; partnering with the Alice Ferguson Foundation and seven private organizations for the JBAB Potomac Watershed Cleanup involving more than 200 volunteers and removing 1,700 pounds of trash and recyclables materials from base shorelines and raising awareness of the problem of pollution in the region's waterways; reaching out to surrounding community with Job Information Session; being the first base to ever merge the Navy Ombudsman and Air Force Key Spouse programs leveraging communication between military members and their families; increased participation in the Navy Five-Miler, promoting military physical fitness, and more.

The CINC Award was created by President Ronald Reagan in 1985 to challenge the men and women of the Department of Defense to recognize installations that have done the best job with their resources to support the mission and seek out the most innovative solutions to the challenges they face.

An installation is handpicked from each branch of service and the Defense Logistics Agency (which was added to the competition in 1988), where the command has done the best job of sustaining the mission, increasing workforce productivity, and enhancing quality of life. The program encourages healthy competition among services and installations, recognition of achievements, creative management, improvement, new ideas and leadership.

"This was a year long process, with a focus on customer satisfaction and safety," Calandra said. "I'm very proud of this accomplishment and thank the JBAB staff, our tenant, mission units and everyone on this installation for their hard work and effort."

"Competition to be the Navy's candidate for this DoD award will be fierce, but we have a strong package thanks to everyone's outstanding dedication."

Redskins: Good team to study for what not to do

New York thrashes Washington, 34-19

Commentary by Ken Harvey
Former Washington Redskins Player
Special to Joint Base Journal

With the game tied at 19 to 19 in the third-quarter, we all hoped the Redskins could win. Like most fans and probably team members, we waited for something bad to happen.

The Redskins didn't disappoint. Twenty-one points were scored in the fourth-quarter for the Jets, giving the Redskins an embarrassing thrashing.

Looking at team concepts, motivation and leadership, the Redskins are a good team to study for what not to do.

As it stands now, instead of a belief that they can overcome obstacles, they need only wait and bad things will happen, which reinforces their belief system.

At the start, the running game was going well, then as if by mandate from heaven, they switched to a passing game. The quarterback is not that strong, why switch?

If I were on the side line, I would think, here we go again. I would do my job, but probably wouldn't dig deep down inside where you must dig for that "extra" in order to win.

A dropped ball from Moss late in the fourth-quarter and a dropped interception by Hall closed all doors to a comeback.

Leaders needed

Confidence flows downhill, if there's no change agent that can overcome the downhill flow, a loss ensues.

If you think about big offensive play makers, the go-to-person, I dare you to name one person for the Redskins. Helu ran well but his ability to become a change agent is dampened by mediocre offense calls. Who on defense can be counted on to make the sack or play to change the outcome of the game? I am still looking for the person.

You may have one or two good games, but who can inspire everyone around them to play better? The answer is no one on this team; these players exist on winning teams.

It pains me to say this, but there was no pass rush against the Jets quarterback, whose play is affected by pressure put on him. I think everyone is so tight and concerned about showing up on Monday claiming to have done their job is that no one is willing to take a chance. Good teams take chances.

There are so many holes with the team that it is more than just the players, it starts with the mind.

Keys to victory

Redskins keys to victory against New England:

1. No Turnovers:
The Redskins have turned the ball over 28 times this season. That's second worst in the league behind the Philadelphia Eagles. In Sunday's game against the Jets, Washington turned the ball over three times. To beat New England, they must avoid turnovers in every way.

2. Get the crowd in the game early and often:
The Patriots only play regular season games in Washington every eight years. So they really don't have experience playing at FedEx Field. The Redskins must get the crowd into the game early and often to give them some momentum.

3. Pressure Tom Brady:
The Redskins are an excellent pass rushing team with 33 sacks this year. For them to win on Sunday, they must hit Brady all day. And for that to happen, Ryan Kerrigan and Brian Orakpo, in particular, need to step up the outside game.

4. Win the battle of field position and make a play on special teams:
The Redskins have one of the NFL's elite and underrated return men, Brandon Banks. He'll need to have a huge game on Sunday to get the crowd in the game and give the offense good field position.

5. Solidify some great passing plays and keep the Patriots offense off the field: The Patriots give up an average of 307 passing yards per game. That's dead last in the NFL. The Redskins must find a way to make some positive gains through the air.

Prediction -

Patriots - 31
Redskins - 24

About Ken Harvey

Ken Harvey played 11 seasons in the NFL, most recently with the Washington Redskins. His 89 quarterback sacks and four appearances in the Pro Bowl earned his place in history as one of the Redskins' greatest players of all time. He has also been nominated for the Pro Football Hall of Fame. He embraces creativity and rejects "the box" and devotes his time, resources and energy to supporting many charities and philanthropic causes.

Protocol sees greater efficiencies, success merging with J9 MWR

By Senior Airman Susan Davis
Joint Base Anacostia-Bolling Public Affairs

Department of Defense members hang their hats on finding new, innovative ways to carry on the mission while cutting out unnecessary steps.

One way Joint Base Anacostia-Bolling J-9 Morale, Welfare and Recreation members are working smarter instead of harder began shortly after Bolling Air Force Base and Naval Support Facility Anacostia consolidated to become JBAB; Protocol, which used to be its own separate stand-alone office, now falls under J-9 MWR.

Jon Youngdahl, Joint Base Anacostia-Bolling Protocol officer, named several benefits to putting protocol under J-9.

"By placing protocol with the organization that runs most of the venues that protocol would use and by providing protocol with more resources and personnel to assist in hosting events, it sets us up for greater efficiency and success," said Youngdahl. "It's a much greater marketing effort as J-9 employs the largest number of people on JBAB."

"What we do is so interrelated," agreed John Robinette, Morale, Welfare and Recreation director. "It only made sense to include protocol under J-9."

It could also even add up to cost savings by avoiding duplication of efforts and resources, such as flags and other things, Robinette said.

Youngdahl also mentioned the benefit of leadership with much more authority and access to JBAB leaders (namely Robinette) than protocol has had in the past, as well as new perspectives on how to best organize and plan events.

"Protocol still has interaction with JBAB leadership but also has higher ranking people to run interference about any ceremony or event that needs clarification from the leadership," he said.

Being such a small office of only two people also used to put a strain on the mission when protocol officers had other personal engagements, such as doctor appointments. Now, under the J-9 umbrella, there are other well-qualified members who can step in and take over in their absence.

This week alone, protocol and MWR have co-produced two events here—the wreath laying ceremony at the JBAB Main Chapel on Wednesday and the JBAB holiday tree lighting ceremony Wednesday night by the Arnold Gate.

"Even at an event like the tree lighting ceremony, J-9 helps by providing items such as a tent to shelter folks from the rain, while the event itself is put together by protocol," said Robinette.
