Reunions — time for tears and laughter

by Cpl. Pat Lewandowski

A crowd of more than 500 gathered at Pearl Harbor Naval Station July 17 to greet the 37th Marine Amphibious Unit as it returned from a six-month Western Pacific deployment.

Approximately 1,600 Marines from Battalion Landing Team 1/3, Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron-265 and MAU Service Support Group-37 were welcomed home. Families and friends of the deployed leathernecks waved and held up signs to the returning Marines while Maggie McGuire played the "Marines' Hymn" on her bagpipes as the ships passed Widow's Point, the entrance to Pearl Harbor.

As the warships slowly made their way to the pier, the crowd of family members and friends, armed with handkerchiefs and banners, anxiously waited to catch a glimpse of their loved one. When the devildogs appeared at the gangway they were greeted with cheers and kisses, leis and hugs. The scene was one of excitement as the overjoyed throng clutched their returning warriors. The Fleet Marine Force, Pacific Band joined to greet the ships, playing rousing renditions of "Waiting Matilda," "Anchors Aweigh," and the "Marines' Hymn."

As the emotions of the moment subsided, the Marines reflected on days past — a seemingly endless journey across oceans, visiting and training in ports throughout the Western Pacific.

The 37th MAU was embarked on ships from Amphibious Squadron-5 which consisted of the USSs Belleau Wood, Bristol County, Dubuque, Thomaston and Monticello. While deployed, the task force participated in exercises in the Philippines, Australia, Korea, Japan and Thailand.

"We made a good presence in the Pacific and Indian Oceans," said LtCol. Raymond Ayres Jr.,

During operation 'Valiant Usher' in Korea, we formed up with a Republic of Korea Marine Regimental Landing Team and spent several weeks in exhaustive training exercises. We worked hard out there and it led to be home."

While the ships proceeded into Pearl Harbor, Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron-265 flew to the Air Station where it was welcomed home by families and friends, overwhelming the "Dragons" with flower leis and marathon kisses.

"There was a lot of pressure out there being a 'Force in Readiness' in the Pacific," said 1stLt. Timothy Szendell, HMM-265. "We had to wade through a lot of rumors out there concerning our next destination. Now that we're back in Hawaii, I'm just glad to see my wife."

Amidst the tears and laughter was a collective sigh of relief — "Our families are reunited again, our Marines are home."

RELIEF AND APPOINTMENT — Sgt. Maj. Allen J. Kellogg Jr., recipient of the Medal of Honor for gallantry in Vietnam, passes the unit sergeant major NCO sword to Col. J.J. Dube, commanding officer, Marine Barracks, Hawaii. Kellogg relinquished his position to Sgt. Maj. Dube on July 11. The ceremony, held at Puffer Hall aboard Pearl Harbor, was attended by Brig. Gen. Richard A. Gustafson, deputy commanding general, FMFPac, and the Marines of the command. ## Uniforms available thru mail order

HQMC, Washington, D.C. — Although the Marine Corps Exchange at Quantico, Va., is the central stocking point for all commercially procured uniforms and accessories for women officers, those officers unable to visit Quantico can now order uniforms through a recently distributed mail order catalog.

Approximately 5,400 catalogs have been distributed to posts, stations, Marine Barracks and messes throughout the world. The catalog provides detailed information together with mail order blanks for purchase of uniforms and accessory items. Orders are ordered by mail, and do not include the normal alterations cost.

Those women officers who wish to visit the exchange at Quantico to purchase uniforms should stop by the Uniform Shop at The Basic School. This branch of the exchange system maintains a complete stock assortment for women officers (some sizes may require special order).

Although women Marine officers must order their uniforms from the Quantico exchange, male staff NCOs and officers may purchase uniform items through the catalog from the Marine Corps exchanges at Camp Pendleton, Camp Lejeune, as well as at Quantico, SMCOs and above may select a deferred payment plan by mail order simply by checking the appropriate box on the order form.

Sergeants and below (male and female) who wish to order uniform items by mail must make their request to MCLB, Albany, Ga.

For more detailed information, or to request copies of the mail order catalog contact the Marine Corps Exchange, HQMC, Washington, D.C. 20315.

To schedule an appointment, take your children, their shot cards and health charts to the Immunization section any Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday or Friday from 8-11 a.m. or any Monday, Tuesday or Friday from 1-3 p.m.

Each child will be given a tuberculosis (TB) test and an eye examination. After the TB test is read two days later by nurse Pat McKinley, an appointment will be scheduled for the final portion of the physical.

For information, contact Pat McKinley at 257-3321.

Football players and cheerleaders wanted

Reconnaissance Co. uses many tactics for successful attack including jumping in NBC gear

BIRD'S EYE VIEW — Two leathernecks from the 4th Force Reconnaissance Company prepare for a jump. The company's mission is deep reconnaissance, both before and after an assault.

DOWN, DOWN, AND AWAY — A leatherneck from the 4th Force Reconnaissance Company, leaps from a CH-46 helicopter while wearing full nuclear, biological, and chemical warfare gear. The company's inspector-instructor staff made the jump July 5 at Helemano Military Reservation.

OFF THEY GO — Marine paratroopers from the 4th Force Reconnaissance Company answer the Hawaiian landscape as their CH-46 "Land"...

Story and photos by Sgt. Christopher Wood

Out of a moonless sky swoops a CH-46 helicopter like a hungry owl in the night. Scanning the darkened horizon below, the pilot spots his objective area and lets forth a thankful sigh.

"I can see it," he mutters to no one in particular, "even in this darkness."

Still, he wonders. Brother wind is fierce tonight, he thinks. Maybe too fierce. Indeed, all during the flight from the forward controlled site, buffeting gusts had tossed the craft around like a frisbee, the turbulence of the skies contrasting sharply with the determined faces of the crew and passengers.

Their confidence in an almost physical thing, the passengers make final adjustments and checks on their gear. Experience tells them that it's impossible to overcheck a parachute, and common sense makes them inspect their other gear — ominous thoughts its presence is.

If someone with an infrared scope were to spot the helicopter from below, they might observe what appears to be a bug-eyed creature crouching at the craft's lowered ramp. He might spot mysterious bulky figures as they jump from the chopper, their chutes blossoming like black orchids as they fall into a strange, near-invisible mist.

"Our mission is deep, deep reconnaissance, both pre-assault and post-assault."

Strange mist? Deadly is more like it — nerve gas dropped by the enemy to ward off infiltration into their captured territory. For the Marines dropping silently to the ground, the nuclear, biological, and chemical warfare gear that they wear would, they hope, protect them from the death-bringing gas.

Their mission? To reconnoiter the area in preparation for an attack by Marine ground forces. Successful reconnaissance would make possible a successful attack. Failure could mean disaster.

"Our mission is deep, deep reconnaissance, both pre-assault and post-assault," said Maj. Gordon Jackson, Inspector-Instructor with the 4th Force Reconnaissance Company.

Although the bulk of the Reserve Recon force is headquartered in Reno, Nev., the 12-man inspector-instructor staff of active duty Marines operates out of Honolulu and is tasked with training the company's reservists for combat — recon style. "Our mission is to support the Reserve company and act as advisors and assistants," Jackson explained. "We are the active duty side of the company. The company itself drills two days a month and for two weeks during the summer."

"For most of us, this was the first time we jumped in full NBC gear. The next step will be to go full NBC gear with full combat equipment."

To enhance its own proficiency, the inspector-instructors jump about once every week and made a rather unorthodox jump at Helemano Military Reservation July 5, as they plummeted to the ground wearing full NBC gear. "There are many different facets of jumping in which we have to remain proficient," Jackson said. "For most of us, this was the first time we jumped in full NBC gear. The next step will be to go full NBC gear with full combat equipment."

"We're trying to maintain proficiency in all of the different areas because when the time comes to be employed, I'm sure that we'll have to wear NBC gear. We have to make sure that we're comfortable and proficient in everything we do so that when we train the company to do it, it'll be clear that we're the duty experts."

Anyone who has worn full NBC gear can attest to its warmth. While it might be welcome in the snow of far-off northern lands, it's not very comfortable in Hawaii's tropic scenes. Still, it wasn't the heat that bothered Jackson the most. "The biggest problem was with the gas mask," he remarked. "It restricts your vision considerably."

"It was most obvious after we left the helicopter (a CH-46 from Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron-262) and were actually falling through the sky. When we went to turn right or left, we nearly drifted into surrounding jumpers. And when we neared the ground, we lost our frame of reference because our peripheral vision was shut out."

As might be expected, it is the landing itself that Jackson considers the most difficult part of any jump. "You're falling at 17-22 feet per second," he related, "which doesn't sound or seem fast until you get into a position where your depth perception is starting to pick up. Usually, that's at about the last 100 feet."

"If you look at the ground, you get what they call 'ground rush,'" he continued. "It looks like it's coming up really fast. Some people tense up and crash hard. But once you make sure the ground below is free of obstruction, you should look up at the horizon, not at the ground. You must maintain a proper, prepared landing attitude."

But even for Jackson, a veteran of approximately 150 jumps, a bad landing is possible. "I made a bad landing once," he revealed. "I landed on the roof of a building, got dragged off the roof, landed on a platform, got dragged off the platform, and landed in a parking lot. I made one jump and three landings."

"The biggest problem was with the gas mask, it restricts your vision considerably."

Making that initial jump, according to Jackson, isn't very difficult. "Exiting the aircraft isn't hard," he said. "Newer jumpers aren't really scared, but there is a natural apprehension about jumping out of the aircraft. But once you've jumped with that rig often and have seen it work under all sorts of circumstances, you get to depend on it 100 percent. It's a super piece of gear."

"We've literally had a guy fall out of the aircraft, due to the fact that the ramp was a little slick and the aircraft hobbled. The guy didn't fall out early or late; he just went to jump out, lost his balance and fell out. But once you exit the craft, everything happens pretty automatically."

Height, Jackson said, is a technical thing. "Technically, you shouldn't go above 10,000 feet because that's where you need oxygen. But with the static line parachute we're using, anything over 1,500 feet is really not necessary. Sometimes we go higher to give the guys more time with canopy control (through which they can land in a close proximity)."

"The lowest we're allowed to jump in a training situation is 800 feet," he continued. "But in a tactical situation, we'd be jumping extremely low. One of the Grenada jumps went at 500 feet with no reserve parachutes."

Although 4th Force Recon jumps out of both helicopters and airplanes, there is a vast difference between the two. Out of a helicopter, devildogs soar into 90 knots of wind, while 125 knots is the prevailing windage out of a fixed-wing aircraft. But no matter which craft serves as the combat taxi, safety remains the overriding concern.

"Parachuting is very much a 'you're your brother's keeper' type of thing," Jackson remarked. "In the Army, your parachute rig would get one check prior to taking off. We require that every man gets a check by a rigger (someone who packs the parachutes) and a check by the jump master. Also, when the chute is packed, it is checked by an inspector. Plus, there is an additional check on the craft itself. And if anyone sees something that is unsafe, he has the authority to cancel the jump."

One of Jackson's men is Sgt. Mark Tompkins of Troy, Mo. A parachutist for nearly four years, Tompkins loves his job. "It's something different," he said. "Not every Marine can do it. We jump every week, and not every jump unit can do that. We're not an elite organization, but we do have a different mission. And to me, that's special."

Jackson and his inspector-instructor staff left for training in the Philippines July 14, taking with them four of the company's six platoons.

ELOP! — It wasn't a happy landing for this Navy parachutist, stationed at Pearl Harbor's West Loch. Jumpers from different services sometimes train alongside the 4th Force Reconnaissance Company, as they did at Helemano Military Reservation July 5.

Dreamer . . .

Along with the Miss Hawaii title, Dreamer was awarded a trophy for being most photogenic and for having the best party dress.

Dreamer competed against 34 girls, ages 4-7. They were judged in three categories: interview, casual and party dress wear. "I made all of Dreamer's pageant attire," said Mrs. Wood. "I guess you can say it's my hobby."

In the judges' interview, the contestants were judged on their poise and how well they answered the questions. Dreamer placed first in that category.

Competing in pageants is a new experience for most young girls, but for Dreamer, this one was number eight. She started competing at the ripe old age of 1½. "When Dreamer was born, my neighbors encouraged me to enter her into pageants since she was such a beautiful baby," said Mrs. Wood. "Her first pageant was the Cherokee County Baby of the Year in Atlanta."

Dreamer was the second runner-up in the Little Miss Northwest Atlanta on 1979 and again in the Pacific Princess in Honolulu in 1983.

As a result of her beauty, Dreamer will appear in an animated Christmas special, "Silver Spurs," now being filmed in Hawaii.

"Getting Dreamer ready for the pageant was time consuming and a lot of hard work, but I loved every moment of it," said SSgt. Wood, ordnance chief, Marine Heavy Helicopter Squadron 463. "It was a great feeling for me to crown my daughter the fairest in the islands. Something a lot of fathers don't get to do."

Dreamer was later congratulated by Gov. George Ariyoshi and will be representing Hawaii in the National competition held in Florida in October.

"I was very happy and excited to have won the pageant," said Dreamer. "My future goals are to become Miss America and then Miss Universe."

"I'm very happy for her," said Kalani, Dreamer's brother. "Now I have a celebrity for a baby sister."

ANGLICO tests Hawaii

They left behind the lush green valleys of Southern California, flying here on two Air Force C-141 Starlifters, only to jump out of the aircraft before they landed. The Marines and sailors who claim membership to this team of daredevils comprise the only Reserve Air Naval Gunfire Liaison Company in the country — 3rd ANGLICO, 4th Marine Division.

One hundred and sixty-one Marines and Navy personnel arrived here June 15 to begin their annual two-week training evolution. The Reserve leathernecks, commanded by LtCol. Don Duffer, spent 14 days sharpening their military skills, including personnel administration, heavy vehicle operations, ammunition handling and air assault training.

A portion of the jump training was conducted en route to Hawaii as 57 ANGLICO devildogs made a 500-foot jump over Helemano, near Schofield Barracks. Even after a six-hour flight the Marines made the jump safely. While the

Guaranteed loans to be collected

The guaranteed student loan program has provided educational opportunities for active duty personnel, retirees, reservists, and Department of Defense civilian employees. A large number of these loans have not been repaid.

More than 13,300 letters were mailed to loan recipients in March for payment on these loans. Of this number, approximately 2,200 are active duty or retired Navy people, and 700 are active duty or retired Marines.

Recently enacted laws permit the Department of Education to work with other Federal agencies, including the Department of the Navy, in collecting these debts. Those who have not responded to notification are urged to contact the Department of Education immediately, to arrange payment.

Individuals failing to do so could face withholding of up to 15 percent of their pay until the loan is paid off. In cases where litigation is necessary to recover a debt, as much as 25 percent of a person's pay may be withheld.

BOMBS AWAY — An F-4 Phantom from Marine Fighter Attack Squadron-232 puts a 500-pound bomb on target during a recent training exercise on the island of Kahoolawe. The attack aircraft were directed to the target by Marines from the 3rd Air Naval Gunfire Liaison Company, 4th Marine Division, who were in Hawaii for their annual two-week training evolution. The ANGLICO leathernecks spent three days on the "isle of death" directing naval gunfire, air strikes and artillery fire.

ANGLICO...

airborne Marines gathered their chutes, the remaining personnel flew on to Hickam Air Force Base where they boarded buses for the trip to the Air Station.

Using the Air Station as their base of operation, the reservists conducted training at various facilities around Oahu including Schofield Barracks and Wheeler Air Force Base.

While at Schofield, the ANGLICO personnel conducted joint operations with members of the Australian and New Zealand armed forces, giving the allies a better understanding of American supporting arms and the specialized ANGLICO mission. Third ANGLICO also provided liaison teams for a command post exercise conducted by the 25th Infantry Division at Schofield.

ANGLICO's primary mission is to support Army and allied nations who are unfamiliar with Navy and Marine Corp. tactics.

This mission demands flexibility. Part of that flexibility involves airborne training. ANGLICO Marines receive their airborne qualification at Fort Benning, Ga. After qualifying, the Marines must stay current by jumping regularly, usually during drill weekends. ANGLICO and Force Reconnaissance are the only Marine units that routinely attend jump training.

"This training package took a year to plan and coordinate," said Lt. Cmdr. Tony Troxel, commanding officer, Naval Detachment, 3rd ANGLICO. "From the very beginning, we tested this unit's readiness and ability to deploy assets using any possible means. We were invited back to Hawaii by the 25th Infantry Division as part of their command post exercise. The diversity of military units here, including allied nations on the Pacific Rim such as Australian and New Zealand, gives us a unique opportunity to cross-train and prove our methods to the people who we will be directly supporting," Troxel continued.

"Our mission is to give U.S. Army units and allied countries, both NATO and RIMPAC, flexible, maneuverable firepower when and where they need it. We are the duty experts when it concerns naval gunfire or naval air support. We also understand the characteristics of shipboard weapons and how to coordinate them. Our mission here in Hawaii is to teach the various units how to use these offshore assets effectively," he said.

Sixty-one of the ANGLICO visitors began their second week of training with a helicopter flight to the military training facility on the uninhabited island of Kahoolawe. The Marines made their way along the dusty terrain to several sites around the island where they erected a command center, a naval gunfire spotting bunker and climbed the air control tower to coordinate air strikes.

While the California leathernecks occupied themselves with the task of establishing communication lines on the desolate island, an Army artillery battery readied their guns for the upcoming exercise.

Battery B, 7th Bn., 8th Field Artillery, positioned across the island from the Marines, was tasked with providing artillery support to the ANGLICO operation.

"We brought 90 soldiers and six guns to this island in support of the ANGLICO operation," said Capt. Joseph Call, commanding officer, Battery B. "We never worked with Marines before, so this gave us a chance to see our sister service in action. This is the biggest thing we've done in a long time — I jumped on the opportunity to do it."

With Navy ships offshore, Army artillery on the island and close air support aircraft coming from the carrier Enterprise and the Air Station, ANGLICO had its hands full. The smooth transition from one mission to another was only accomplished through diligence and job know-how.

"I'm very proud of these young Marines — they live and breathe esprit de corps," said Duffer. "They have performed flawlessly throughout our training here. The unique thing about this unit is that they never work with Marine units during a crisis. Marine Corps and Navy personnel understand and practice coordination of naval weapons. Each unit has an air and artillery officer as well as a naval gunfire liaison who can handle the coordination of offshore fire support.

"We integrate with a unit and supply them with the information necessary to make sound tactical decisions. We try to make them understand the availability and types of weapons we have. We can operate at any echelon depending on the situation.

"We are the only Reserve ANGLICO at present and that puts a strain on the unit at times," Duffer continued. "As a Reserve unit, I expect more out of these Marines than I do of their active-duty counterparts. They must grasp their job skills quickly because there's a limited amount of time to devote to skill training. We have no time to fool around."

The ANGLICO Marines used their time wisely indeed, as thousands of pounds of ordnance found its mark during the three-day exercise on Kahoolawe.

After spending those three busy days on the 'isle of death,' the Golden State leathernecks headed back to the Air Station to clean their gear and head for home — mission accomplished.

THE NEVER ENDING STORY

Going home can be a strange experience

By Cpl. Tony Sinagra

MC (R) San Diego — Going home. For someone returning to the "old stompin' grounds" for the first time after enlisting in the Marine Corps, taking leave can be a very funny, if not a strange, experience.

I know. I just came back. During the five-hour plane ride to New York City, I had a lot of time for crazy thoughts to run wild in my brain housing group. Thoughts ranging from, "I wonder how much everyone has changed," to "I wonder what my old house looks like."

Needless to say, by the time my plane touched down at Kennedy Airport (the only airport by the way, that has more potholes on the runways than its surrounding area's highways), the butterflies in my stomach were in full flight. I should've known what was in store for me when, while we were leaving the plane, a guy with frizzy, long hair and beard, looking like a straggler from the Woodstock era, asked me, "So man, how do ya like the Army?"

Fortunately, my three years of Marine Corps discipline helped restrain me from throttling him. When I finally met with my welcoming party of about a half-dozen close friends (most of us knew each other from way back in grammar school), guess what was the first thing they noticed?

That's right, folks, the rumors were confirmed. After all these years, my dearest friends finally discovered that I did, indeed, have ears! Oh, sure, they'd caught a glimpse of the laces on occasion, but this was the first time they got a real good look at the whole set. They were all quite amazed.

After the usual ordeal of luggage was taken care of, we all piled into my best friend Dave's van for the long, bumpy ride to Long Island (pronounced Long Island by the natives, and commonly referred to as simply "The Island").

During the drive, I was repeatedly bombarded with all sorts of questions about my new career in the Marine Corps. Anxious queries such as, "Do they really make you eat worms?" and "What was boot camp like?" seemed the most popular.

Having foreseen these circumstances, I whipped out my old recruit training annual and showed them the 11-week, step-by-step transformation from civilian to graduating Marine.

After four or five hours of explaining the basic concepts of close order drill, uniforms and ranks, physical fitness routines and firing the M-16, I was almost convinced they were getting a grasp on what I had first experienced. That is, until my friend Ed asked me, "Hey, can you check out a rifle to go deer hunting with?"

After another hour or so of attempting to describe my tour of duty in Okinawa, I realized, with more than a bit of frustration, that no matter how much I tried to make them understand Marine Corps life, they would have to experience it for themselves to really know what it was all about.

Within a couple of days, the changes that had taken place in me during three years of life in the Marine Corps was quite apparent to everyone. "My God," my friend Dave said in mock horror as he observed my meticulously organized suitcase, "they've turned you into a neat freak!"

"And since when did you start ironing your shirts and pants?" teased my former roommate, Andy. "Trousers," I reminded him patiently. "They're called trousers."

And I must admit, after the novelty of seeing all my buddies began to wear off, some of their old habits seemed to really get under my skin. They all stared with surprise when I told Bob to get his hands out of his pockets. "What for?" Bob countered with a puzzled look.

"Because it... it looks sloppy," was all I could come up with. I also bit my tongue on a few other occasions where my friends were inexcusably acting, well, like civilians.

Then there's always some wise guy who, upon hearing about our Physical Fitness Test, concludes, "Ahhh, that ain't nuthin'." I, of course, had to call his bluff.

After much debate as to what a legal pull-up was, and a lack of area in which to run three miles without interference from traffic, sit-ups were chosen as the means of challenge. The wager: If my adversary did 80 correct sit-ups in two minutes or less, I had to buy him a lasagna dinner at the finest restaurant in town. If he failed, I would be treated to stuffed lobster tails at the same establishment.

Of course, this agreement would only be valid if I did 80 sit-ups first.

Even after a week of indulging in pizza, pasta and a number of my other favorite treats, I finished my sit-ups with about seven seconds left on the clock. Then the fun began.

My "able" opponent discovered that his neglected stomach muscles had no intention of doing any more than 40 sit-ups. And the last 10 could only be described as the tail end of some sort of seizure.

The lobster tails were perfect. The highlight of my visit came Sunday, which was Dave's wedding day, and the reason for my cross-country journey to begin with.

At the reception, I saw most of my old friends and acquaintances who I'd missed during the week. A couple had finished college and were working in decent jobs, but most were stuck in the same trade they had when they graduated high school. Some had been unemployed for quite a while. About halfway through the evening, I began to feel not only very proud of my personal progress as a Marine journalist, but kind of lucky too.

I felt even more fortunate when people's conversation turned to travel. While I had been to Japan, the Philippines and Korea, most of my buddies thought that being "overseas" meant crossing the Hudson River into New Jersey.

So, by the night's end it seemed painfully apparent that while I was broadening my horizons in the Marine Corps, learning and experiencing so many different things around the world, most of my old friends were broadening their waistline in the neighborhood pub.

By the time I was ready to leave the next day, I felt strangely alone and isolated from the pals I made during the first 20-plus years of my life.

Oh, Dave and I will always be close and still keep in touch on a regular basis. He seemed to understand the many changes that took place inside me during the last couple of years, and he was genuinely happy for me. Most everyone else, after their initial curiosity faded, seemed to resent or at least be disturbed at the new turn my life had taken.

Like my friend Andy, who drove me to the airport, I guess I was yacking away at some of the things I had planned to do the next few months, and I must've started to sound a bit like a recruiter. "You know," Andy said with more than a little irritation in his voice, "you think that everyone should be a Marine." "Nahh," I replied, a little wiser from my recent visit, "I guess everybody can't be."

Fraud: Even those little things that 'everyone does' hurts

by Marge Holtz

WASHINGTON — Fraud, waste and abuse — "not me," you say. Fraud, waste and abuse is about those big foul-ups, the $400 hammers or the $50 screws. Fraud, waste and abuse, that's those other guys; I'm careful and I'm honest.

But are you? You're probably honest but you're probably careless.

Your boss is out of his favorite pens. He really likes that particular kind and you really hate to visit the office supply department — it's three buildings away, and you're busy. So while you're there this time, you'll pick up several dozen of those pens and a bunch of other stuff, so you won't have to go back so soon.

That's waste. The pens will dry out long before any one person could possibly use them, and storing all that "other stuff" becomes a problem. Hoarding office supplies — even if they are not perishable — is abuse. You are creating an inventory control problem for the supply folks; they could overorder supplies because they think the demand has increased, when in reality you were just lazy. One trip to the supply office could be two strikes against you.

This is your third official trip this month. Boy, are you tired; there's no glamour in living in hotels, despite what your non-traveling fellow employees think. You're pooped, so you'll just skip dinner and watch TV. Later, when you fill out your travel claim, you list an $8.50 dinner for that evening. After all, you routinely lose money on travel — the claim never covers all your expenses, and this will help recoup a little.

Fraud. The statement on the travel voucher is clear: "The statements on face, reverse, and attached are true and complete." You've defrauded the government out of $8.50 in just one day, and by your own standards — which are strict — you consider yourself honest and careful. Now take several million honest and careful people and multiply them by $8.50 a day and — well, you get the picture.

Darn that alarm clock. It's the third time this week that it hasn't gone off. Now you've overslept almost 30 minutes, and your car pool will be here in 5 minutes. Oh well, things will be slow at work today, anyway. Your supervisor is on leave and most of the work is caught up. You'll just call in sick; you are sick — sick of work, ha, ha. No, you'll tell them you aren't feeling well and will be in Monday. You have plenty of sick leave; might as well use it. After all, you earned it, and besides, taking a day of sick leave will give you a chance to get caught up on things around the house.

Fraud, again. You aren't sick, and when you tell your acting supervisor you are and initial a time sheet accordingly, you're misrepresenting facts to intentionally obtain something that's not legally yours. That's fraud. Now if you've used the flimsiest of symptoms as an excuse to use sick leave — if you're not feeling terrific but could work anyway — that's abuse. Remember, you consider yourself honest and careful.

You're closing your briefcase, ready to depart the office after a hectic day. You look over your desk and spot some pencils. You're out of pencils at home — the kids asked you to pick some up for school only this morning. Oh well, you'll just take them home. It's late and you did work through your lunch hour today, with no overtime; that's justification for taking the pencils home.

No, it's not. Two wrongs don't make a right. Don't you become angry when the gas station attendant hands you a pen that has U.S. Government clearly stamped on the side? Doesn't it sometimes seem that every merchant in town uses a government pen? Where do you think they come from? They come from people who take them home. They come from people like you, and all of us are paying for those pens and your kids' pencils.

It's 7:35 a.m., you should be getting under way to work, but another cup of coffee would certainly taste good. Oh well, it will only make you about 10 minutes late, and your supervisor won't notice. So you've been a little late a couple times this week;

what the heck — fill 'er up.

Abuse again. No doubt about it. Your supervisor might be understanding, but you're abusing a system that permits employees with legitimate reasons to be a few minutes late, occasionally. The second cup of coffee was not legitimate, and remember — you're a careful, honest person.

Fraud, waste and abuse touches everyone. From the plain government envelopes that you use to pay some of your monthly bills to the $400 hammer, from slightly overlong lunch hours to grossly misrepresented travel claims — fraud, waste and abuse is everywhere. Fraud, waste and abuse touches even honest and careful people. Fraud, waste and abuse touches you. Think about it. You can help.

Lokahi Canoe Club prevails during Hui Wa'a Regatta

The ancient Polynesian art of canoe racing came to the Air Station for the second time in a month last Sunday. Twelve canoe clubs competed here in the Na Ohana O Na Hui Wa'a Championship Regatta.

Lokahi Canoe Club won the regatta by earning 73 points, mostly in upper division events. This was the fourth win for Lokahi in the last six Hui Wa'a regattas this season.

Kaneohe Outrigger Canoe Club finished in second place with 64 points, Kamehameha Canoe Club totaled 48 points and Ka Mo'i with numerous disqualifications finished in fourth place with 45 points.

The winning clubs will compete in the state meet Aug. 4 on Kauai.

A Marine team also competed in the men's master's division of the race. However, they did not fare well because they were placed in a division beyond their expertise. This was their first race.

Deer hunting season opens on Kauai

The Department of Land and Natural Resources announced the opening of a hunting season for black-tailed deer on the Island of Kauai. The season will be held on five consecutive weekends beginning on September 29, 1984 and ending on October 28, 1984. The bag limit will be one antlered buck (male deer) per hunter per season. Applicants for the season will be assigned to one of the five weekends by means of a public drawing. There will be no make-up weekend.

Applications for the 1984 Kauai black-tailed deer hunting season were made available July 20 at all District Forestry and Wildlife offices throughout the State and at participating hunting license dealers. It is not necessary to have a hunting license to fill out an application for the public drawing; however, a valid 1984-85 Hawaii State hunting license is required before a participant actually hunts.

The deadline for all black-tailed deer tag applications to be turned in at Forestry and Wildlife offices is 4 p.m. Tuesday, August 21, 1984. The public drawing to assign hunting dates will be held at the State Office Building Conference Room, Lihue, Kauai at 4 p.m. Tuesday, August 28. Validated deer tags will be mailed directly to each hunter applicant after the public drawing.

Non-hunters or bag boys will not be permitted to accompany deer hunters into the deer hunting area this year, due to safety considerations and the large number of applicants expected. Hunters not wishing to hunt alone are advised to staple their application to that of another hunter, so that they will be drawn for the same hunting date. Chapter 123, Rules Regulating Game Mammal Hunting, should be consulted prior to hunting. Additional information may be obtained at any Division of Forestry and Wildlife office: Kauai 245-4433, Oahu 548-5917 or 548-4921, Molokai 553-5415, Lanai 565-7235, Maui 244-4352 and Hawaii 961-7307.

Support Wildlife Conservation: To report game law violations, call the Division of Conservation and Resources Enforcement offices on Oahu and the neighbor islands at these telephone numbers:

Oahu — 548-5918

Aspirin aids sunburn pain

Aspirin is a known headache remedy. But is it also a sunburn reliever? The American Medical Association says yes.

Dr. Kenneth Lampe, AMA Drug Program Director, said aspirin can help in the early stages of sunburn by taking some of the sting out of it.

He explained that aspirin causes a chemical reaction, which in turn inhibits the production of a body substance that turns skin red and sore.

The recommended dosage for healthy adults, if their skin is starting to burn but isn't red, is three aspirin right away and two every four hours for 12 hours.

"This kind of dosage is not a problem for a healthy adult, as it would be for a child," Dr. Lampe said.

"Anyone allergic to aspirin or sensitive to it should not, of course, take it," he cautioned.

On the other hand, adults already taking high doses — some arthritics take 12 aspirins at a time — should not take any more for sunburn, he said, because it's not necessary and could be harmful.

The aspirin taken for arthritis will also help the burn, he explained.

Dr. Lampe pointed out that people have a kind of built-in alarm system. "Adults get a ringing in their ears when they have the maximum dose of aspirin," he said. "But it's far beyond the kind of dosage we're talking about here."

However, a spokesman for Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C. said it's better not to burn at all.

Stressing prevention, the spokesman said that two of the most effective ways to avoid a painful burn are to limit exposure to the sun and use a sunscreen.

"Aspirin can reduce the severity of the burn until the person can find shelter or put on oil, but if the person is already red, the aspirin won't help," he said, adding that military personnel who are unable to work because of careless exposure to sun could face disciplinary action.

"But the attitude generally is that the sunburn is enough of a penalty in itself," he said.

An independent study about 10 years ago by Dr. Diane Snyder at the University of Miami showed that a specially-prepared aspirin solution, when applied to the skin, alleviated pain and redness at early stages of exposure.

Dr. Snyder said that when aspirin is taken internally it has this same effect on the whole body.
