chain of command usage

During my first year as Commandant of the Marine Corps. I was fruch by the number of Marines wha felt that they needed to go stated the chain of command to resolve possonal problem. In factoo sany eases pur research indicated that the problem could have been obsed within the chain of command by Marines in partions of addrense and responsibility. While Truns' addressing my deep concern over this subject at leadquarters, Marine Corps, a White Letter from Gen. Wallace M. reen dh. was brought to my attention: "Since the founding of our Corps, continued success in war and peace has made the name Marine synonymous with soliderly wirtus, military proficiency and professional pride. This leggery, passed on through generations of Marines, has been built on the correstones of camaraderic, discipline and sport de corps.

the cornersiones of camaraderic, discipline and appril de corps. Every Marine, from his first days in the Corps, is thoroughly indoctrinated in a way of life in which Marines take care of their own's one where each Marine may have complete reliance on his follow Marine no matter the circumstance. One of the means of instilling this comaraderie and trust is to insure the opportunity to all Marines to express constructive orditicam, trievances, and recommendations via the existing military their of command, further to see that its availability to understood and exploited.

iderstood and exploited. Splaine is not simply unhesitating obscience to orders, triainly, in the combat insurvment, response must be suif; ag and predicable. However, this regularment is not in while with suitable, consideration of innovational commendations prior to agtion, nor of professional criticism is preview after. All Marines have bath opportunity, and sponsibility to contribute to our administration, techniques is procedures. This is especially true with respect to matters has been on the daily life, safety, and effectiveness of arines. In part, it wis through, this process that we ogressively improve. There's not much about Hawaii I don't like. In fact, I'd be hard pressed to think of two things normall associated with this state, as opposed to any of the other 49, that are totally distasteful to me. But I can come up with one — POI!

Introduced to it for the first time at a luau, it became readily apparent that it and my taste buds were, and would continue to be, on divergent paths

Poi is a simple mixture of water and the taro root, one of the oldest known vegetables. These rudimentary ingredients are blended, and the result is a pudding-like substance that most Hawaiians love and swear by, which most mainlanders hate and swear which most at Taro was introduced to the islands about 450 A.D. by the adventuresome, seafaring Polynesians who discovered this land. On their canoes they carried cooked crushed taro wrapped in ti leaves. By not adding water to it until it was ready to be eaten, the taro would not spoil or ferment for several months.

Taro is grown throughout the islands and there are more than 80 varieties, usually distinguishable by the interior color of the root. Many of the taro patches found in Hawaii are said to be over a century old. However, the majority of the patches where taro is the patches where taro is commercially grown is found in Hanalei Valley on Kauai. In ancient Hawaii, poi making was a task left solely to the men. The oblong, bulbous root of taro was first peeled of its fibrous bark, then worked Organ the work use during the mashing. As the root and water mixture changed consistency, lighter weight poi pounders were used until desired. consistency was achieved — (rare, medium, or well done!) The poi was then put into wooden bowls and allowed to ferment; the degree of fermentation again detemined by taste preferences.

For centuries poi served as the staple food of Hawaiians, and it is said that a man or woman would consume up to 15 pounds of it daily. The well developed bone structure, exceptional teeth and smooth skin of the ancient Hawaiians attest to the naturitional value of poi

It was, and still is, a popular baby food, and people with ulcers find it remarkably satisfying and devoid of the side effects of other foods that tend the avgravate their tend to aggravate their condition. Additionally, poi is practically nonallergenic

Of course, the industrious ancient Hawaiians would never accept only one use for their plants. While the root of the taro plants, while the root of the taro plant was the basic ingredient of poi, the leaves were also edible and prepared in a variety of ways. In fact, the Hawaiian word for the taro leaf is "lu'au." Sound familiar?

Medically, the plant had many uses: cut portions of the were rubbed on insect stalk bites to reduce the sting; people with fever could reduce the discomfort by drinking a concoction of the juice of the stalk blended with sugar or coconut milk; the root, when cut, was also used as a stypic to control bleeding, and thickened poi was applied as a poultice to infected sores.

Fresh poi is supposed to be the most bland tasting of all. To make it more flavorful and give it a pleasant "tang," the recommendation is to allow it to ferment at least a day. During the fermentation, "friendly" bacteria go into action and supposedly improve the taste. If, however, that doesn't do the tric, the other suggestion is to eat poi only after you've taken a bite of more flavorful food, e.g., e.g., some kalua pig, followed by a little lomilomi salmon; a forkful of long rice and then a fingerful of poi. The traditional manner of eating poi is with your fingers. If it's thick, use one finger; a medium consistency needs two fingers. However, twirlingit around a spoon has become the more accepted and discreet method of eating it.

Poi is both readily available and nutritious. The next step is to make it palatable. I'm not

FIGHT

Release a Marine

to drive that tank, man that gun, down that plane

by SSgt. Theresa Anthony

"Taught to be tough, trained for combat, they can't do it chained to a flat top desk. And that's where women came in,' according to a 1944 recruiting book.

"For Marine men are fighting men — trained for the front lines of battle. And they are asking women of this country to assume their duties here at home so that those front lines may be filled.

And to the women who accept their invitations, who wear

And to the women who accept their invitations, who wear our uniform, share our trials and triumphs, march with us to victory, your country will be forever grateful," said our 18th Commandant, LtGen. Alexander Vandegrift. In special recognition of women veterans from all services, President Reugan signed a Congressional Resolution proclaiming Nov. 11-17 National Women Veterans Recognition Week. The resolution calls for an observance to create greater.

The resolution calls for an observance to create greater public awareness and recognition of the contributions of women veterans to express the nation's appreciation for their service; and to inspire more responsive care and service for women veterans.

Eleanor Warner, a veteran from World War II, enlisted in. the Marine Corps in 1943. She explained that it wasn't difficult for her to tell her parents that she was joining the Service because her mother had served in the Navy during World War I.

'I had been working as a telephone operator for two years since graduating from high school," said Warner. "I admired the fact that my mother had served during the war, and I wanted to support my country. So as soon as I could, I enlisted " emisted." Stationed at MCAS Santa Barbara, Calif. Warner worked as a radio operator. "I enjoyed being a Marine and liked my job," said Warner. She and 20,000 other women served in the Marine Corps during World War II, but because they were a part of the Reserve, they were only enrolled for the duration of the war. In 1948, Congress passed the Women's Armed Services Integration Act, authorizing the acceptance of the women interthe worder Maxim Commun. into the regular Marine Corps.

Reserve MSgt. Carol Mueller enlisted in the Marine Corps the serve magnetic formation of the server in the marine of ps in 1952. Mueller recalls leaving her native Hawaii on a double-decker sea plane enroute to Parris Island, S.C. "It took me 14 hours to fly to Alameda, Calif., and then five days by train to get to Parris Island," said Mueller. The trip was slow but the pace quickened once she arrived at Parris Island. "Trained by male Drill Instructors, we were kept on our toes," said Mueller. "We had 10 minutes to dress after waking up, make our bunks and be out on the street, rerady to begin the day. In order to be on time, a lot of the girls slept in their uniforms, but the training staff caught on and began having bed checks. Little things, like brushing your teeth in bed, saved time," explained Mueller.

Mueller served 15 years on active duty, working in the exchange field. "I learned a great deal about the operation of a business," said Mueller. "I really enjoyed being a Marine but my husband and I wanted a family, and the Marine Corps did not allow pregnant women to remain on active duty at that time," Mueller explained. In 1967, Mueller left the Corps and is now serving with the Reserves, Today, there are 9,000 women on active duty, and their enthusiasm and "esprit de corps" is just as evident as it wasin the first women who served some 60 years ago. "Once a Marine, Always a Marine" remains true as Warner heads te local chapter of the Women Marines to isin Hawaii and the encourages all women Marines to isin Hawaii, and she encourages all women Marines to join.

"Those of us who can meet every two years for a convention. We reminisce, compare notes with the Marines of

HAWAII MARINE

The championship game in the 1984 Intramural Flag Football season was played Briday afternoon and the H&HS team emerged victorious.

Headquarters Co., Brigade, was the victim as H&HS put the icing on their playoff winning streak with a 98 final score. Quarterback Joe Lovan didn't allow HQCo's defensive unit time to gather their thoughts as he moved H&HS to within three yards of the end zone before he personally took it in. The extra point attempt was deflected. The HqCo offense waited until their second time around to

The HqCo offense waited until their second time around to get on the board. After starting from their own 35-yard line, Kenny Higareda was the eventual receiver of a 15-yard pass from quarterback Darril Taylor for the touchdown; it was Higareda again for the two-point conversion. It was then that both defenses got tough, giving up nothing to the advances of their opponents. But it was in the final minutes of the fourth quarter that to the advances of their opponents. But it was in the final minutes of the fourth quarter that H&HS began the final drive of the game. Quick passes and short runs to the sidelines allowed a first down and a few plays afterwards. But, as in their earlier playoff game against SOMS, the outcome rested on the size 10 right foot of John Millen.

It was definitely to be the last play of the game as time ran out after the snap, but Millen rose to the occasion and with the finesse of a great pro field goal kicker, he put it squarely through the uprights.

While H&HS won the championship here, they will be joined by the HqCo team in concluding the Hawaii All-Marine Competition at Pearl Harbor this weekend.

Both teams came from behind in the local competition as H&HS beat SOMS, 10-8; Amtracs, 17-16; and 1st RadBn, 20-13. HqCo Bde beat MABS-24, 26-13; H&S BSSG, 17-14 and H¢MS-14, 14-9.

In the first round of playoff action, HqCo 3rd Marines was held scoreless by H&S BSSG, who got one touchdown, and MACS-2 lost to Amtracs 21-8. H&MS-24 and 1st RadBn, ranked number one and number two respectively, lost their game in the scmifinals.

"All teams should be congratulated on the excellent level of.

play this year," commented Jerry Price, sports specialist at Special Services. "This has been the closest scoring playoff in years, which demonstrates' the keen competitive spirit developed by all teams."

Quarterback Joe Lovan, H&HS, throws a short screen

pass to one of his receivers

John Miller puts his foot into it for the field goal and the win despite HqCo's efforts to block it.
