Military women working in more nontraditional jobs

A just-released report shows that the military reserves women in nontraditional jobs at a much higher rate than civilian employees with 25 percent of military females holding such a position compared to 1 percent of civilian women. A non

A new report released by the National Bureau of Economic Research shows that military women are more likely to hold nontraditional jobs than civilian women. The report attributes this to the unique nature of the military environment, which often requires women to take on roles that are traditionally held by men.

Some examples of non

Women are increasingly being hired in traditionally male-dominated fields such as construction, law enforcement, and firefighting. The report notes that women make up a growing percentage of the military workforce, and this trend is expected to continue as the military seeks to attract more diverse talent.

In conclusion, the report highlights the importance of recognizing the role of women in the military and the unique opportunities that the military offers in terms of career development and job satisfaction. As the military continues to evolve, it is important to ensure that women are equally represented in all aspects of military life.

PMO cracking down on unsafe bicycle riding

The Marine Corps is tightening its rules on bicycle riding to reduce the risk of accidents and injuries. The new rules include requiring bicyclists to wear helmets, following traffic laws, and maintaining bicycles in good working condition.

The changes were made following a series of accidents involving Marine bicyclists. The new rules also require riders to undergo a bicycle safety course and to be examined by a medical officer before being issued a bicycle.

The aim is to reduce the number of accidents and injuries, and to ensure that bicyclists are safe and capable of riding safely.

Washington, D.C. - "There are too many accidental discharges of weapons," said the Comman der of the Marine Corps in a recent White Letter. "And most of them are caused by innon-civilian people.

White Letter stresses weapon safety

In 1985, 48 accidental discharges were reported, an increase from 1982 with only 13 discharges. The report indicated that most of the accidental discharges occurred when firearm owners were not aware of the firearm's existence, or when the firearm was found and handled by an unauthorized person.

The report emphasizes the importance of firearm safety, and recommends that firearm owners take steps to prevent accidental discharges, such as using locks and keeping firearms secure.

The report also highlights the importance of firearm training, and recommends that firearm owners take firearms training courses to learn how to safely store and handle firearms.

In conclusion, the report stresses the importance of firearm safety and training, and urges firearm owners to take steps to prevent accidental discharges.

Camp Smith Maintenance Section disbands

Camp H.M. Smith - An unusual early morning silence空中划出的每天 caused the newly named bases on Feb. 1, when officers from the Maintenance Section no longer did their morning chants.

After 30 years of keeping both military units active, the 40 man unit was disbanded and relinquished its responsibilities to a civilian company.

According to 1Lt. Andrew Holdert, Camp Maintenance officer, the decision to disband came after a Congressional program which said that a civilian company is more cost effective than a military unit.

In 1997, we found that our civilian companies could bid for maintenance contracts at a lower price than the camp. Holdert said.

"The camp was also able to bid, but a civilian company offered a lower price for the same contract."

According to Holdert, eight Marines will remain to help in the transition, and to represent the command when maintenance decisions are made.

"When emergencies occur after hours we had Marines who could respond instantly merely by calling Maintenance," said WO2 John M. Gilho, assistant maintenance officer. "Now until further notice, all emergency calls must be directed to PMO's desk sergeant. If a repairman is needed immediately, the company will handle the work."

The civilian company will handle any work the Marines do not decide to do, and more. "For instance, when Maintenance Marines were not authorized to do any painting of the company will at least spot paint whatever was marked," said GySgt Eric Smith, maintenance administrative chief. "Other benefits will be the company's ability to provide highly specialized workmen for the repair task."

"Our pride reflected in everything we accomplished and whatever we go, we will remember Camp Smith, The camp will never forget us, especially at dawn when we chanted everyone awake," and the last hymn.

Col. Gene E. Costantini, Camp H.M. Smith commander, bids farewell to the 40-man Maintenance Section, Feb. 7, which did all maintenance for the camp since it became Headquarters, FMFPac in 1966. A civilian company now takes care of repairs at the camp.

Gramm-Rudman Act

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The final version of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Balanced Budget Act of 1985, which brings to an end a long debate over deficit control, remains uncertain in its impact despite the willingness of Congressmen to assign a Supremest Court review.

Mostly, FY-85 cuts were implemented on March 1. Among those cut are pay raises for retired military officers.

The course provides awareness to the individual terrorist threat, background, history of terrorism, individual protective measures and hostage survival.

Marines from 1st MAB returned home, Feb. 25-26, after a month of extensive field training on the "Big Island" of the Pohakuloa Training Area. More than 500 Marines of 1/3 trained in normal field conditions in preparation for the Combat Readiness Evaluation test, which lasted 50 hours and covered combat skills and quick judgment thinking situations that would occur in the field during combat.

The evaluation stated that the 1/3 Marines had no critical deficiencies and were found to be 100 percent combat ready.

In addition to the MCCRE test, Marines also participated in a Command Post Exercise and a regimental size operation called "Valiant Fire." Other 1st MAB units participating were BSSG-1, MACS-2, and HMM-262.

Marines of H&S Co., 1/3, conduct rifle physical training.

East Coast Marine reservists escape to Hawaii's warmth for annual training

By Cpl. Stephen Frank

The unit, officially designated MARS-24, Det. B, has a wide transportation background, consisting of three truck sections, maintenance, and repair elements of a force support group and a detachment of a headquarters squadron.

"We are a mirror image of an actual unit," said Tigges. "Our people are spread all over the Nation now, filling in other units."

Mechanics worked with BSSG, while most of the major transportation people worked with MAON-2, according to Tigges. Both reservists were with the Tactical Airfield Fuel Dispensing System on the flight line.

"We brought 116 people with us, including nine from our Inspector and Inspector Staff," said Sgt. Maj. Charles Gerard, Monday, the unit's sergeant major who is a cabinetmaker in Wilmington, Del.

"Most of the units seem glad to have us," said Tigges. "Everyone seems to have fit in well, and the support has been good. That is the first time one unit has been in Hawaii," he continued. "We usually support combined air exercises."

Three years ago the unit went to Fort Drum, N.Y. for cold weather training. This annual training duty, said Monday, "is a pleasant change for us."

The active duty Marines here are glad to have the reservists.

"These guys are great, and I can't say enough good about them," said Cpl. James Moran, active duty troop transport officer for MARS-24. "They've come here and taken over some of our functions since our people are deployed in PFA right now."

Some of the reservists took the opportunity to improve their own qualifications and upgrade their qualifications in the area of training with the Marines here.

The reservists didn't just work alongside active duty Marines, they also took part in off duty activities. On Feb. 17, approximately 20 reservists joined the MARS-24 counterparts in the Great Aloha Run.

The reservists of MARS-24, Det. B, and the Marines of MARS-24 joined for our annual training on Feb. 21. Promotions and awards were given, and the units exchanged pleasantries to commemorate their working together.
