On Point “Set a goal, make a plan, save automatically”

Military Saves is a cooperative effort between the armed services and the Consumer Federation of America, one of the Department of Defense’s official financial readiness non-profit partners.

Military Saves Week, Feb. 23-28, joins the military community with federal, state and local resources, along with military banks and credit unions to focus on financial readiness, debt reduction and future savings. The theme for Military Saves 2015 is “Set a Goal, Make a Plan, Save Automatically.” The financial readiness of Soldiers and their Families is a priority for the Army because it has a direct effect on mission readiness.

Solarium 2015

Solarium 2015 is intended to inform and shape the future direction of the U.S. Army, as it brings together 100 senior captains from across the Army to identify issues and address challenges to our Army.

WASHINGTON (Feb. 24, 2015) – A female first lieutenant from Fort Carson, Colo., who flies Apache helicopters, successfully completed all course requirements of the second gender-integrated Ranger Training Assessment Course, or RTAC, which ended this week.

Of the 100 Soldiers who started this most-recent RTAC, 17 were female. Of the Soldiers who completed the course successfully, 35 were male and one was female, said Maj. Gen. Scott Miller.

Miller serves as commander of the U.S. Army Maneuver Center of Excellence, at Fort Benning, Ga. Fort Benning hosts both the RTAC and the Ranger course.

Successfully completing RTAC qualifies Soldiers to go on to the Army’s Ranger course. Female Soldiers who participate in and successfully complete an RTAC will be able to attend the first gender-integrated Ranger course. That “Ranger Course Assessment” begins April 20.

Standard for males and females will continue to be the same as they have always been at both RTAC and the Ranger course, Miller said.

Helping to ensure that the standards remained the same for all participants were 17 enlisted and eight commissioned “observer-advisors,” or O-As, said Sgt. 1st Class Tiffany Easter, an O-A.

An additional duty of the O-A was to advise Ranger instructors, she said, since in years past there had never been female students. Some of the advice was on sleep arrangements, latrines, and so on.

Becoming an O-A itself was a pretty rigorous process, Easter said. Training included a 12-mile foot march, a combat water survival test, and land navigation. Also, the Army looked for O-As with suitable backgrounds.

“Anytime Soldiers raise their hands and volunteer for a tough course, I admire that,” Miller said. “And this is about the toughest course the Army has. The operating force will receive more well-trained Soldiers because of this experience.”
