Senior Leaders

Veterans of “Forgotten War” saluted

“Today, we recognize the service of our veterans, specifically our Korean War veterans. You have served with moral distinction and we are eternally grateful.”

– Lt. Gen. Stephen R. Lanza
Commanding General, I Corps
“Salute” Ceremony, Nov. 13, 2015
Joint Base Lewis-McChord, Wash.

On Point

The Noncommissioned Officer Solarium II

The Noncommissioned Officer Solarium II 2015, a sergeant major of the Army (SMA) initiative, is a significant effort to inform and shape the future direction of the U.S. Army. This effort brings together 60 sergeants first class at U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command’s Center for Army Leadership at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. Through this initiative, the noncommissioned officers (NCOs) will identify issues that will have an impact on the Army into the foreseeable future and provide recommendations to the SMA. The Army values its leaders’ observations and insights, which will be used to adapt policy, processes and programs.

FORT BRAGG, N.C. (Nov. 16, 2015) – The 21st Military Police Company (Airborne) was recognized with the U. S. Army Forces Command “Eagle Award” for Excellence as the command’s best military police company for fiscal year 2015.

Established in 1974, the award recognizes the selected unit for accomplishments and achievements encompassing every phase of activity bearing directly on mission accomplishment.

Standing with the unit’s formation, Gen. Robert B. Abrams, commanding general, FORSCOM, presented the Eagle Award trophy to Cpt. Adam Herring, company commander, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 503rd Military Police Battalion.

The 21st, which is part of the 16th Military

Police Brigade, topped 79 other military police companies in FORSCOM to earn the award.

“I was really happy to see this is also a company that can not only do their core warfighting competencies as airborne military policemen in excellence and readiness, you’re not just one trick ponies,” said Abrams, pointing out the company’s volunteer efforts, property accountability and high Army Physical Fitness Test scores.

“So when people say, “what does excellence look like?” I take a picture of this company and (say) here’s what you need to aspire to be as a unit. Because it wasn’t just one person. It was all of you working together that helped earn this award. So be proud,” said Abrams.

The company will now represent FORSCOM in the Army-wide competition for the Brigadier General Jeremiah P. Holland Award.
