Lt. Gen. Swan relinquishes command of U.S. Army North, Pg. 6

Military community takes part in Veterans Day parade, Pg. 10
Military service is about people

There are a number of leaders here from San Antonio, and you’ve heard me say it before, we’ve been in a lot of places over the years but nothing compares to what this city does and offers to our Armed Forces every single day of the week. That moniker “Military City, U.S.A.” really fits in this great city, so thank you all for coming out.

I started my career in 1972, at the tail end of the Vietnam War. I graduated the academy in ’76. We came up in the Army in the post-Vietnam era and learned from our leaders. There’s a great deal of comradeship I feel for our Vietnam Veterans.

I want to thank all of you because you didn’t get the thanks that we got after the Gulf War, or even today, so we certainly appreciate what you’ve done over the years, and the things you’ve taught us over the years have made us a stronger Army.

There have been really no bad assignments along the way, and I guess that’s because Melanie and I try to make that assignment at that time the best assignment we’ve ever had. That has certainly been the case here, at Fort Sam, and with Army North. You don’t do this for the paycheck. Even at the general officer level, it’s not about the paycheck – it’s about the people – and that is really what has kept us going for all these many years

We’re closing out the career in the Homeland Security/ Homeland Defense environment, which is something out of the mainstream for a lot of us in uniform. But as I’ve had the experience to do some of this work in Washington and at Northern Command headquarters, I’ve convinced more and more every day that our Armed Forces do have a role in the homeland – albeit within the traditions, the legalities and the culture of the U.S; 9/11 taught us that we are vulnerable here at home. Hurricane Katrina taught us that we’re always vulnerable to Mother Nature’s catastrophes, and our Armed Forces are very important in this environment.

I really want to thank, individually and collectively, the Army North team in attendance here from all our components for what you do, every day, in conjunction with our National Guard partners and our interagency partners to keep our fellow citizens safe right here in the homeland.

We are America’s Army; we are America’s forces; we’re part of the American people. I couldn’t think of a better place to close out my career than right here in San Antonio, at Fort Sam Houston, in front of the clock tower, right here in the Quadrangle.

The retirement is his second, following 28 years of active and Reserve service.

Following his relinquishment of command, Swan retired after more than 35 years of service – the final two as the commanding general of Army North and as the senior commander of Fort Sam Houston.

“The balance of your leadership style, and the command climate that you established at every point in your career, is truly something those who have served with you, and under you, value – it is your legacy,” said Gen. Charles Jacoby Jr., commanding general, North American Aerospace Defense Command and U.S. Northern Command.

Prior to assuming command of Army North, Swan’s notable service included commanding the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment, the 7th Army Training Command, Joint Force Headquarters – National Capital Region and the U.S. Army Military District of Washington. He also served as the Chief of Staff and Director of Operations for Multi-National Force – Iraq during Operation Iraqi Freedom.

“As America’s insurance policy against the most unthinkable threats to the homeland, our mission is truly a noble one. My last six years have been spent defining that role that protects the homeland and the Army’s role in that mission,” said Swan. “This job, this command, is truly the ‘no penetration line’ in the defense of our country.”

While serving as commanding general for Army North, Swan continued to build up the nation’s chemical, biological, radiological, nuclear and consequence management response force, which is tasked with preparing for catastrophic events, such as terrorist attacks or natural disasters.

Swan said Army North members have established broader and stronger partnerships with their Mexican and Canadian counterparts to protect the homeland from threats that know no borders, posed by international and transnational terrorist groups.

“You have hit all our priorities even before we had defined them. You instinctively understood and knew our center of gravity for this mission was our trusted partnerships,” said Jacoby. “You are a leader of great patience, humility, integrity, and you embodied that most simple yet most powerful word – Trust!”

Swan was commissioned as an Armor Officer from the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York, in June 1976. “As for my last closing remarks, I would like to leave you with this. Even though, thankfully, more of our service members will be home this holiday as the drawdown from Iraq is completed, thousands more will still be separated from their Families,” said Swan. “Please keep them in your thoughts and prayers this holiday season and also those who are recovering from their wounds and our Gold Star Families.”

Lt. Gen. William Caldwell, who most recently served as the commander of NATO Training Mission – Afghanistan and as the commanding general of Combined Security Transition Command – Afghanistan, will assume command of Army North in January 2012.

Maj. of the Army Raymond Chandler III (right) thanks Soldiers for their hard work and dedication Nov. 17 for helping and supporting Wounded Warriors at the WFSC.

The Warrior and Family Support Center provides coordinated services to patients, next-of-kin and extended Family members with a primary focus on Wounded Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom Warriors. It provides a friendly, comfortable environment in which to take a break, watch a movie on big-screen TVs, play video games, check email or use the Internet, select a book or magazine to read, make a phone call, or just grab a cup of coffee. Wounded Warriors and their Family Members visit the WFSC to maintain contact with other military members or extended Family Members, to receive emotional support, answers to their questions, and to extend their rehabilitation away from the hospital. The rehabilitation involves learning to cope with war related disabilities as individuals, as couples and as families.

SMA to NCOs, leaders: no one stands alone in today’s Army

Leaders,
So far this year, we’ve lost almost 300 Soldiers, Family members and Department of the Army Civilians to suicide. At this rate, we may exceed our 2010 record high of 343.

Our Army Family faces significant challenges: relationship problems, substance abuse, financial issues, work-related problems, post-traumatic stress, traumatic brain injury and legal issues are just a few. As an Army, we’ve taken steps to provide our Army Family with the resources they need to aid in suicide prevention efforts. We’ve increased access to Behavioral Health Care and expanded the Strong Bonds Program. We’ve reduced waivers for high-risk accesses and decreased the amount of time a Soldier can have prescription medication. We’ve also expanded Ask, Care, Escort training and increased the number of Applied Suicide Intervention Skills Training trainers.

Earlier this year, the Health Promotion and Risk Reduction Task Force reviewed recent suicide trends and found two areas of concern: rising suicide rates among Soldiers with a support MOS and Soldiers living alone in off-post housing.

These challenges indicate that we are not properly integrating incoming Soldiers into the community, unit and Family support systems. Thus, leaders at all levels need to establish and sustain a viable sponsor program in accordance with Army Regulation 600-8-8. It is imperative that we take additional efforts to maintain visibility and accountability of these Soldiers.

I need each leader to train and familiarize themselves on the principles discussed in Chapter 3 of the Task Force’s July 2010 report ‘The Lost Art of Leadership in Garrison’ and ensure the reflected initiatives are being implemented at all levels. This includes:
— Sharing of relevant information between medical providers and commanders.
— Ensuring Soldiers understand that controlled substance prescriptions will have an expiration date and that a positive urinalysis after the prescription expiration date may result in an illicit-drug use finding — Ensuring timely reporting of command intervention in response to high-risk behavior
— Ensuring that Soldiers subject to investigative/legal actions are monitored for signals of high-risk behavior or self-harm — Reinforcing the requirements of AR 600-85 concerning initiation of separation actions for Soldiers with positive urinalysis.

Finally, leaders must continue to adopt a supportive mindset that encourages those in need of help for behavioral and other non-physical health issues to get help without the fear of adverse consequences.

As leaders, we strive to mitigate stressors on our force, but we can only do so much. First-line leaders need to actively engage in their Soldiers’ lives or we will continue to lose this battle.

I am calling on all of our leaders, but especially the noncommissioned officers, the backbone of our great Army, to make a difference.

We must cultivate a climate that encourages help-seeking behaviors and supports those who ask for help. By standing Shoulder to Shoulder, we can ensure that No One Stands Alone!”

Texas Honor Ride donates $128,000+ to Warrior and Family Support Center

FORT SAM HOUSTON, Texas — Airmen proudly display American flags as motorcycle riders pass underneath a bridge on Interstate Highway-10 during the Texas Honor Ride Nov. 12. A check for more than $128,000 was presented to the Warrior and Family Support Center by the Texas Honor Ride at Fort Sam Houston’s Salado Creek Park. The group has raised more than $630,000 over the past six years in support of the Wounded Warriors being treated at Brooke Army Medical Center, according to its Website. The ride kicked off in Houston, with local military and civilian riders joining the group at the Exit 619 rest stop on I-10. Approximately 800 motorcyclists participated in the event. The group’s mission, according to its Website, is “To honor, directly help and improve the quality of life of wounded warriors and their families who are recovering at the Brooke Army Medical Center (BAMC) in San Antonio, Texas.”

62nd Medical Brigade certified for homeland response mission

FORT EUSTIS, Va. — The 62nd Medical Brigade became the first military unit to receive the “Task Force Medical” designation under the Defense Chemical, Biological, Radiological and Nuclear Response Force. Joint Task Force – Civil Support certified the Fort Lewis, Wash.-based brigade to conduct its domestic CBRN response mission following a command post exercise at Fort Lewis Oct. 31 – Nov. 4.

TF Medical would be the first medical unit from the Department of Defense to arrive on the scene of a major incident if additional federal resources are requested by a state government or a federal agency to help support response efforts. Medical Soldiers could respond to a nuclear explosion or attack, a radiological or chemical incident, or a biological attack or outbreak such as the plague outbreak simulated during the exercise.

Bringing military and civilian partners together offered the first opportunity to integrate her organization into the newly formed DCRF enterprise, said Col. Theresa Schneider, the 62nd’s commander.

“This exercise gives the medical task force the opportunity to use its ability to respond quickly and effectively as we deploy to a national disaster site and work with our civilian colleagues to take care of the folks who are effected by that disaster,” said Schneider.

In the training scenario, terrorists unleashed a deadly plague of yersinia pestis in a U.S. city. As the ‘casualties’ and ‘fatalities’ mounted, the state governor determined his state’s resources were all but exhausted, resulting in a simulated presidential disaster declaration activating the Federal Emergency Management Agency. FEMA, in turn, requested assistance from the DoD to treat victims, transport patients and provide assistance to local authorities. This is where the 62nd and JTF-CS came in.

“It’s important we do training like this regularly to ensure the units that might need to go are ready for when and if it happens,” said Gunnery Sgt. Juan Ospina, exercise planner and the lead for when and if it happens, said Schneider.

The exercise tested the medical unit’s leadership in controlling the brigade’s smaller units, and ensured that senior officers and non-commissioned officers were ready to issue orders and efficiently organize tasks the brigade will need to accomplish if a CBRN incident were to occur.

Army North, Pershing Elementary sign covenant

FORT SAM HOUSTON, Texas — Leaders of Headquarters and Headquarters Battalion, U.S. Army North, signed a covenant Nov. 8 with school officials at John J. Pershing Elementary School and unveiled a new sign at the school commemorating the military and community partnership.

Lt. Col. Shannon Miller, commander, HHBN, and Command Sgt. Maj. Eddie Fields, senior enlisted leader, HHBN, signed the formal charter with Kathleen St. Claire, principal, Pershing Elem., before cutting a ribbon and unveiling a new sign at the school as part of the Fort Sam Houston “Adopt-a-School” program.

“Although our unit has been partnered with Pershing Elementary since last school year, we wanted to establish the covenant with a formal charter – and unveil our new sign – because this truly is a partnership, a binding agreement between both communities, and truly takes commitment on everyone’s part,” said Miller.

The charter outlines terms and areas of responsibility for the school and the Army North battalion. The partnership makes a difference for the students, said St. Claire.

“You enrich the lives of these children,” said St. Claire, to volunteers from Army North at the ceremony. “You make an impact in the lives of our students. When they are 18 or 19 years old, they are going to remember you, and we hope that you are going to remember them.”

The program has made a difference for the students at the school, and efforts like the Adopt-a-School program have improved scores at the school, said Debbie Andrew, Pershing Elem., case manager, Communities in Schools. The school improved to “Recognized” under the Texas Education Agency accountability ratings system after the last school year.

The four possible TEA rankings, in order from best to worst are: “Exemplary,” “Recognized,” “Academically Acceptable,” and “Academically Unacceptable.”

The program has made a difference for the students at the school.

Lt. Col. Miller, who tutors Jalynn, a third-grader at the school, when she’s not commanding the Soldiers of HHBN, said tutoring is a good change of pace and is rewarding.

“I think the difference is that you can see the progress your student is making at each session,” said Miller. “I didn’t realize at the onset that I’d have such an impact.”

Under the agreement, Army North volunteers will conduct regular school visits, coordinate for mentor and tutor volunteers upon request, coordinate installation usage for on-post program activities, and other requirements.

School officials will provide training for mentors and tutors, instructional supplies and supervision of children.

Principal Kathleen St. Claire, John J. Pershing Elementary School, signs a covenant Nov. 8 to officially partner the elementary with U.S. Army North’s Headquarters and Headquarters Battalion. Lt. Col. Shannon Miller (center), commander, HHBN, and Command Sgt. Maj. Eddie Fields, HHBN, also signed the covenant.

Fort Sam Houston welcomes incoming Army North deputy commanding general

FORT SAM HOUSTON, Texas — Community and Fort Sam Houston leaders joined members of U.S. Army North in welcoming the unit’s new deputy commanding general Nov. 4 during a ceremony in the historic Quadrangle.

“I am especially gratified to have Maj. Gen. Davis here,” Swan said. “Walter is a distinguished and experienced officer, and his assignment history is in line with what we do here at Army North.”

Davis highlighted several of Davis’s previous assignments, including commanding the Army’s new 20th Support Command, a chemical, biological, radiological, nuclear and high-yield explosives Army command activated in October 2004. Davis also served as commander of the Joint Unmanned Aircraft Systems Center of Excellence, U.S. Army Forces Command; and as deputy director, Army Capabilities Integration Center, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command.

Davis said he was ready to get to work.

“I’m ready to jump in with both feet to embrace this command and this community,” Davis said.

Davis said he was glad to be back in the great state of Texas and humbled to serve with the great military and civilian team at Army North, and was excited about the opportunity to fully engage and immerse himself into San Antonio, ‘Military City, U.S.A.’

All American Bowl Facts

- The U.S. Army became the title sponsor of the All-American Bowl in 2002.
- The U.S. Army All-American Bowl has more than 175 alumni currently playing in the NFL.
is currently scheduled to host the separate conference in October 2012. "There needs to be a harmony of work," said Gen. Luis Patricio Cárdenas Prásho, commander of the Ecuadorian army, at the beginning of the conference. "At this conference, I will propose to touch on the theme of how to manage organized crime. Much of the organized crime occurs at our borders. The ports and borders are the center of gravity for narcotrafficking, money laundering and other illicit criminal activities. The governments need to work together towards an end state of disrupting these activities and looking for socio-economic solutions."

Since transnational criminal organizations essentially affect all countries in the Western Hemisphere, a coordinated regional response is required, which not only involves state and political parties, but law enforcement and military leaders as well, he said.

Transnational criminal organizations, whose activities include narcotics trafficking, financing terrorism, cybercrimes, corruption extortion, counterfeiting, trafficking humans and arms, have a global reach that surpasses the interdiction ability and resources of many law enforcement agencies.

Quite easily, an illicit crime that starts in one country, can pass onto a second and be on its way to a third before it is even detected. Transnational criminal organizations adapt and evolve quickly; therefore countries cannot solve this problem alone or in a vacuum, he said.

"This is not just an issue in the United States," said Maj. Gen. Simeon Trombitas, commander of U.S. Army South. "Transnational criminal organizations have cut a path throughout the political, social and economic landscape of the Western Hemisphere affecting everyone in the region. These threats, which were previously reconciled in the world of law enforcement, have morphed into national security threats."

According to the White House Strategy to Combat Transnational Crimes, released in July 2011 (http://www.whitehouse.gov/administration/eop/nsc/transnational-crime), it is imperative that political, military and law enforcement on the national and international levels come together to foster collaboration and share strategies that have proven to be successful.

The strategy calls for the building of international capacity, cooperation, and partnerships, critical objectives in the fight against transnational criminal activities.

ICE special response teams prep for high risk situations U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement FORT BENNING, Ga. — They serve warrants under hazardous conditions. They secure the airspace over the Super Bowl in Blackhawk helicopters. They go undercover and dismantle drug trafficking organizations. They even assist after a horrible tragedy like Hurricane Katrina. Their overriding goal is to protect public safety. The work of special response team members is often grueling and so is the training they undergo at Georgia’s Fort Benning.

SRT training lasts three weeks and includes several components. Students must complete a 1.5-mile run in less than 12 minutes, drag a dummy for 25 yards, complete 30 pushups and transition over a six-foot wall in full tactical gear. "We average a failure rate of five to six students out of 24 on the first day," said Steve Podaras, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement’s (ICE) National Tactical Coordinator. "Some people are meant for this, and some people are not. That’s what this school does; it weeds people out."

Trainees also are required to meet certain shooting requirements and complete classroom lessons in various tactical disciplines, including intelligence gathering, use of force and officer mindset.

As the training progresses, the students participate in force-on-force sessions, which create the most realistic training environment available. "It’s better to sweat now than bleed later," said Podaras. "That’s why we try to simulate for agents what it will be like in the field when they serve an actual warrant. Individuals attending SRT training are all existing ICE agents or officers. They must serve as field agents for three years to be considered. ICE currently has 22 deployable teams, each consisting of 16 to 18 graduates from the Ft. Benning program. Nearly 400 individuals have graduated from special response team training since it was created more than 15 years ago.

$662 billion defense authorization bill clears Senate By Kate Brannen Army Times WASHINGTON — The Senate passed a $662 billion defense authorization bill for 2012 on Dec. 1 that includes $527 billion for the Pentagon’s annual base budget. Approved by a 93-7 vote, the legislation also provides $117 billion for war spending, $1 billion less than the Pentagon’s request. Another $17.5 billion is included for defense programs overseen by the Department of Energy.

With the clock running out on this year’s legislative session, the bill now moves to conference committee with the House, where various amendments will have to be resolved before a final version can go to the president for his signature.

The Senate version contains provisions concerning how the government detains terror suspects. A compromise on the detainee language came late in the day on Thursday, after days of intense debate over whether U.S. citizens suspected of being terrorists could be detained indefinitely by the military. The White House had earlier threatened to veto the bill over such provisions; it was unclear whether the House would modify the president.

To get the bill passed, the Senate dropped 71 pending amendments at the last minute. But Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., said they could be introduced next week under a separate piece of legislation.

The abandoned amendments was a measure sponsored by Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas, that directed the president to sell 66 new F-16 C/D fighter aircraft to Taiwan. "This decision had been made regarding Taiwan’s F-16 A/Bs, but it said no decision had been made regarding Taipei’s pleas to buy more advanced F-16 C/Ds."

Android, iPhone to be OK’d for official use By Andrew Tilghman Army Times WASHINGTON — For several years, most official Defense Department business has been limited to the BlackBerry. Now, Apple’s iPhone and Google’s Android smartphone software are close to being approved for widespread use across the force.

The Defense Information Systems Agency, which is responsible for digital security across the military, is in the final stages of its approval for the Android and iPhone in late November, the agency said.

William Keely, director of the agency’s field security operations activity, told Military Times that initial use will require approval from the chief information officer of each command seeking to use the devices.

While troops have been using a variety of smartphones for some work-related tasks, most have not received approval for use with the Defense Department’s Global Information Grid, which operates military computer systems and operational databases.

The approval process is complex and painstaking because the use of wireless devices carries the risk of exposing classified information or making DoD’s information grid vulnerable to cyber attacks.

The Army is aggressively pursuing smartphone technology as a key component of its ground combat systems.
